Memorial University of Newfoundland’s Harlow Campus is situated in the quaint, historic town of Old Harlow, Essex. Midway between London and Cambridge, it is linked to both cities by road and mainline railway (approximately 40 minutes from each by rail).

The campus consists of a group of 19th-Century and older buildings. The main building is The Maltings that houses the administration offices as well as accommodation for 41 residents. It also contains a dining room, resources room, common room, student kitchens, laundry facilities and the Lord Taylor lecture room. Cabot House is a 17th-Century cottage that can accommodate 10 residents.

St John’s House is a former Victorian school house, which houses the main lecture room and accommodation for faculty. Self-contained two-bedroom apartments, close to campus at 44 & 46 Market Street are used by faculty or those on vacation.

Harlow Campus is used by Memorial University’s professional schools and other academic departments to offer programs. The campus is also available as a base for faculty members and graduate students conducting research or further study in the UK.

In 1967 Lord Stephen Taylor of Harlow was asked by Newfoundland Premier Joseph Smallwood to become president and vice-chancellor of Memorial University of Newfoundland.

Upon accepting and taking up this position, Lord Taylor said:

“\[I think it would be rather fitting if the oldest town in the New World were linked to the newest town in the Old World.\]”

1968

In 1968 Memorial purchased a former brewery, The Maltings, at Harlow, England, and renovated it into living quarters for 33 students. Also at this time a former Victorian school house, St John’s House, was purchased and converted into faculty accommodation. The first Memorial University students came to Harlow in January 1969, to carry out education and engineering internships in Harlow factories and schools over one semester.

1973

In 1973 a former butcher’s shop and flat in Market Street were acquired and converted into two apartments, each accommodating four in twin rooms for the use of faculty and their families.

1988

An extension was built onto the north side of The Maltings in 1988 to provide increased office space and a library; the quiet room and small TV room were converted into a lecture room and small computer room.

1997

In 1997 the university acquired St John’s Cottage, located next to The Maltings and dating from 1650. Originally three workers’ cottages, they were converted into one house in the early 1960s, providing accommodation for 10 students, with a sitting room, dining room, kitchen, utility, study and shared bathroom/shower facilities.

The name of the building was changed to Cabot House in recognition of the 500th anniversary of John Cabot’s discovery of Newfoundland, which coincided with the 50th anniversary of Harlow as a town.
Education internships in local Harlow schools, a practice that still continues. The campus is now used by undergraduate students from Newfoundland who wish to study for a semester or complete a work placement abroad, as well as by faculty members and graduate students engaging in research and/or further study. Programs that have been offered at Harlow include social work, engineering, business, nursing, medicine and pharmacy. The Faculty of Arts offers both a summer program and an arts semester at Harlow for students.

2007

Since April 1968, Harlow Campus had been governed by the Harlow Campus Trust, which directed the facilities on behalf of Memorial. In April 2007 the Harlow Campus Trust was dissolved and replaced with MUN (UK) LTD., a company limited by guarantee. MUN (UK) LTD. has a board of directors who meet at least twice a year to direct the operations of the campus. Under this arrangement, Harlow Campus is run by a general manager who operates the campus for students in academic (credit) and professional development (non-credit) programs. All programs are developed and overseen from St John’s by the vice-president (academic).

2002

In May 2002 the campus closed for four months to enable major refurbishment of The Maltings to accommodate 51 students in The Maltings and Cabot House, and three faculty and their families in 44 & 46 Market Street and St. John’s Cottage.

Portals Dining Room
Portals presents a good quality varied menu every weekday evening for all residents to enjoy.

Common Room
The Common Room is a large and comfortable room for students to meet, relax, watch TV or a DVD and even play the piano.

Laundry Room
The laundry room houses front loading automatic washing machines and dryers. All are coin operated at a cost of £1.20 per wash and £1.20 per dry. Irons and ironing boards are available. Campus staff are always happy to give a quick lesson in how to operate the washing machines!

Student kitchens
The Maltings houses two student kitchens that provide food storage, cooking facilities and a small dining area. Both kitchens are fully equipped.

Resources room
The library and small computer suite are located here. An area of the room designed to be a quiet space, contains study cubicles with internet connection points for laptop computers (not provided) and comfortable seating.

The library divides this quiet area from the computer section with eight fully networked desktop computers and a printer. Harlow Campus has wired and wireless internet access.

Provision can be made for students or faculty who are visually impaired (where sight cannot be corrected with glasses). At least three months’ notice must be given directly to the campus manager stating all requirements. It must be noted that while every effort will be made to meet specific requirements, we cannot guarantee to satisfy all needs.
The residence is fully networked with a telephone and wired and wireless internet. There are also two networked desktop computers with a printer.

The laundry facilities are located in the main Maltings residence. The kitchen/dining room includes an electric cooker, fridge, freezer and food storage space, plus fully equipped kitchen utensils and china.
Harlow Mill station is a seven minute walk away from the campus and Market Street. The train to London Liverpool Street takes about 40 minutes.
Opposite High Street runs Fore Street and Market Street, where there are three of the Old Town pubs: The Chequers, the Marquis of Granby and the Crown. The Crown has a wall of medieval painting, dating back to the 17th-Century.
Dogs are welcome on leads, thank you.
