Introduction

This list of discipline-specific awards and prizes is the result of department input, as well as internet searches of major scholarly associations from North America and (time permitting) other regions, relevant to each department in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences. Award searches were easier for some disciplines than others, and results varied by the comprehensiveness of websites and their level of web presence. Accordingly, this document should only be considered a first survey of the available awards and prizes for any given discipline. As indicated by the total number of awards for each department, some disciplines are well represented, while others still need further research. In some cases, sub-disciplinary and/or regional associations were easy to find and canvass, while others were not. Some prizes were conceivably relevant to more than one discipline, so the same award may be listed twice. As requested, awards that might have relevance to scholars working specifically in Indigenous Studies-related topics are listed separately.

Awards are presented below by discipline, then listed by association title, award title, website link, brief description of the award, the process of nomination, and the deadline. Some awards do not permit external nominations; award-winners are rather selected by a committee of the relevant association without any external input. These more restricted opportunities were nevertheless included in the list below. Award deadlines are also listed here, if indicated on websites, but the user should always doublecheck the deadline with the source organization, as some deadlines may shift from year to year. “No deadline listed” indicates that award deadlines were not provided on the association website, or that a day/month were not specified.

Though by no means comprehensive, this first initial survey located 415 individual awards for the fifteen departments comprising the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences.
