Discussing Impact of COVID-19 in Research Applications & CVs

Funding sponsors and agencies (such as SSHRC, NSERC, CIHR, and others) may provide space as part of research funding applications to describe the impacts of COVID-19 on your research, supervision of students, and research dissemination. Often these applications will require a statement of the nature of the impact, such as complete disruption of research activities or a slow in research productivity where research does not cease, but proceeds at a slower pace. In some instances, the application will permit you to increase what you include in your list of research contributions timeframe windows beyond what is typically allowed (which is usually 6-years). For example in the case of SSHRC, an increase to the normal 6 year bibliography of research outputs is allowed if you claim your research was halted due to COVID-19 or other leaves. You can therefore request the committee accept an overall six years of research activity be considered rather than simply the last 6 chronological years. Some applications do not allow an increase to the timeframe window, but rather they allow you to contextualize fewer research publications, outputs, graduation of supervised students, etc. It is up to applicants, after assessing the nature of the impact on them personally, to make a case for their halted or reduced research and outline their circumstances. Applicants who have taken leave on account of COVID-19 should also state they were on medical leave and use the associated leave dates.

Assessing COVID-19 Impact

Only researchers themselves can fully assess the impact of COVID-19 on their work and professional lives: everyone's situation is different. While statements might be directed towards scholarly productivity and/or supervision and mentoring, the simple fact remains that COVID-19 disrupted everything.

NSERC provides some helpful language in outlining the impact of COVID-19 on research and personal circumstances that can be (loosely) used for all grant applications:

https://www.nserc-crsng.gc.ca/NSERC-CRSNG/Politiques-Politiques/COVID-COVID\_eng.asp.

For direct impact on research, NSERC states:

Examples of other type of information that can be used to describe the impact include: types of research contributions that have been affected (e.g., data collection, publications, conference presentations, outreach, etc.), impacts on contributions to the training of highly qualified personnel (HQP) (e.g., impacts on internships, difficulties with recruitment, delays in graduation, etc.) and impacts on partnered research (loss of funds, loss of personnel, reduced access to sites, etc.). Note: This is not an exhaustive list. There may be other items you wish to include to describe the impact.

When it comes to personal circumstances:

... stating the nature of the circumstances (e.g., medical, bereavement, family responsibilities, special, etc.) is sufficient. No further detail regarding these types of circumstances is expected. For example, no detail related to an individual or family member's illness should be included in the application. Stating that you were unable to work or worked at a reduced capacity during a specified period of time due to medical reasons is sufficient for the impact of the circumstances to be taken into consideration. It is equally important not to disclose personal circumstances affecting HQP.

Alternatively, SSHRC notes that, "health (and/or disability-related), administrative, family, cultural or community responsibilities, socio-economic context" are all valid conditions impacting research productivity. Each of these could be shaped by COVID-19 in various ways, such as childcare and home schooling, taking care of ill family members, the impact on teaching preparation and other professional responsibilities. SSHRC also distinguishes between "Career Interruptions," where you describe halts in research and "Special Circumstances," where you describe research slow-downs. COVID-19 can be used in either or both sections.

Calculating Durations of Restrictions

If you require precise days for the duration of a specific restriction, please confirm your dates and calculate the duration as needed. Duration calculations are for guidance only and have used the following tools and principles:

- For full duration between dates see <https://www.timeanddate.com/date/duration.html>
- For counting working days between dates see https://www.timeanddate.com/date/working\_days.html
- Working days do not equal class or teaching days. These will need to be calculated if required for any reason.
- Date calculations above are inclusive of the end dates.
- Totals where months and days are tallied treat a tallied 'month' as 30 days throughout (i.e. when one interruption has 14 days, another 9 days, and another 10 days, the calculations would treat these days as 1 month of 30 days & 3 days, rather than 33 days). All other months are as per the online calculator.
