This course aims to identify and justify the principles by which we evaluate our behavior. We will explore such questions as: Is there a universal moral principle governing the conduct of all human beings? Are there specific character traits necessary to being a good person? Can we determine a moral law that would guarantee right action? What is the role of both reason and the passions in our moral behavior? How are some of the prevalent moral/ethical theories applied in practice, to specific moral problems which we encounter in our daily lives? Some of the key historical thinkers we will be looking at are Plato, Aristotle, Mill, Kant and Sartre.
