How Memorial compares to other Canadian institutions

- Memorial students currently pay about 15 per cent of the cost of their education through tuition fees, while the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador pays about 83 per cent.
- When these tuition changes are fully implemented, students will pay approximately 35 per cent of the cost of their education. At other Canadian universities, tuition fees cover an average of 46 per cent of costs.
- Tuition fees for all students -- domestic and international -- will remain below the Canadian average.
- Within Atlantic Canada, Memorial's domestic tuition will remain the most affordable.
- Memorial offers more than affordability: a survey of undergraduate applicants in 2020 showed that the main reason they applied to Memorial was the programs available. The percentage of applicants who chose Memorial because of tuition costs has been decreasing in recent years.

The tables below compare Memorial's fall 2022 tuition with current tuition rates (fall 2021) for Canadian institutions. Most Canadian universities increase fees annually and it is forecasted that the rates below will see at least inflation-based increases of about four to six per cent annually.

Careful steward of resources

By legislation, Memorial is required to maintain a balanced budget. The university has implemented a number of changes since 2012 to find efficiencies of $42 million in order to balance its budget. This includes:

- Reducing the total number of employees by 432 since 2015 (a reduction of 11 per cent).
- Reviewing salary scales, including a 2019 review of senior administrator salary scales. That review led to a number of reductions and changes.
- Reducing university units' operating budgets, while protecting the quality and integrity of programs, maintaining Memorial's special obligation to the province, and ensuring a continued high-quality student experience.
- Continual review of expenditures and business processes
